

CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION ON SAFE HOUSES

By: Michelle Kirby, Associate Analyst

SAFE HOUSE LOCATION

- "Safe house" is an umbrella term that refers to a residence that provides temporary or emergency shelter to certain people such as victims of domestic violence or sexual assault.
- At least 19 states have laws that require the confidentiality of the location of safe houses.
- Eight of these states impose penalties for illegal disclosure, primarily by classifying the violation as a misdemeanor or by withdrawing funding.
- Two federal laws require confidentiality of safe house locations.

QUESTION

Summarize state laws that require confidentiality of the location of houses that provide shelter to domestic violence and other victims (i.e. safe houses), including the penalties for illegally disclosing such location.

SUMMARY

At least 19 states, including Connecticut, have laws pertaining to the confidentiality of the location of safe houses. Generally, they limit any person, public agency, or private agency from disclosing any information that identifies the location or physical address of such houses. Eight of the states impose some sort of penalty for the illegal disclosure of the location. But Connecticut and 10 other states do not appear to impose any specific penalty for such disclosure. Penalties include fines and imprisonment. Also, in some cases, programs or shelters that violate the law may also lose their funding or certification.

Two federal acts, the Violence Against Women Act and the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, impose penalties for disclosing information on the location of safe houses.

STATE LAWS ON SAFE HOUSES

The term "safe house" has several meanings. This report looks at safe houses that provide shelter to people in danger of abuse. These include domestic and family violence shelters, trafficking shelters, shelters for victims of dating violence or sexual assault, temporary emergency shelters, and transitional housing for victims and their dependents.

We found 19 states that treat information on the location of safe houses as confidential. These are Arizona, California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Iowa, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Washington, and Wyoming.

Depending on the state, the law may:

1. prohibit disclosure of information related to safe house locations by anyone,
2. exempt this information from Freedom of Information (FOI) or other public information laws,
3. allow victims to refuse to disclose this information when giving testimony and for evidentiary purposes,
4. generally prohibit courts from ordering production or inspection of anything that would result in the disclosure of such information,
5. prohibit certain state agencies from disclosing or releasing this information unless required by law or with written authorization, or
6. require certain programs to provide assurances that the confidentiality of this information will be maintained.

Four states (California, Georgia, South Carolina, and Washington) classify the illegal disclosure of information about the location of a safe house as a misdemeanor that subjects a violator to a fine or imprisonment. Arizona imposes a civil penalty of up to $1,000.

In Iowa and Kentucky, a program that violates confidentiality and privacy requirements is subject to a loss of state funding, and shelters in Florida may face suspension or revocation of their certifications. Georgia subjects providers of telephone services and telephone directory services to prosecution for failing to file a plan showing how they will protect the confidentiality of the address or location of a shelter.

FEDERAL LAWS ON SAFE HOUSES

The Violence Against Women Act and the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act award grants to states to help support the establishment, maintenance, and expansion of programs and projects to, among other things, provide immediate shelter for family, domestic, or dating violence victims and their dependents. Both acts prohibit grant recipients from disclosing the address or location of any shelter that maintains a confidential location, unless the person responsible for operating the shelter gives written authorization. Failure to follow the acts' universal grant conditions regarding victim confidentiality and privacy could result in a loss of funding (42 USCA §§ 10401, 10406).
